NATIONAL REPUBLICAN NOMINATIONS.

FOR PRESIDENT,

JAMES G. BLAINE, OF MAINE.

FOR VICE-PRESIDENT,

JOHN A. LOGAN, OF ILLINOIS.

We invite the attention of our readers to the contribution published this week entitled "Ancient History." The record of the early labors and successes of the Republican party is becoming history of times beyond the memory of young voters, and no better service can now be done than to revive that record and at the same time compare it with the treason and dishonesty which controlled the policy of the Democrats of that time.

THE election in Maine gives nearly 20,000 majority for the Republicans. This victory speaks for itself in words which cannot be misunderstood. It proves that as in the case of Garfield a campaign of abuse and slander only serves to make Mr. Blaine's friends more eager to stand by him. Until after the October election in Ohio the enemy will continue to boast, but when the State which holds the memory of Garfield in reverence has spoken the doom of Cleveland and Hendricks will have been sealed.

IT IS singular to observe that the papers which are most violent in their attacks upon Republican office holders, and whose war cry is "turn the rascals out," all with one accord unite in the highest tribute to the purity of character of the late Secretary Folger and the late Senator Anthony, of Rhode Island. They confess that these men had no superior in those qualities which justly command the respect of men. Can anything better illustrate the contemptible character of men who use such a cry to aid in getting office for themselves? It is the duty of every Republican to help to "keep such rascals out."

OUR Convention has nominated the Hon. Herman Lehlbach as candidate for Congress in this, Essex District. The choice was by acclamation, and Mr. Lehlbach is assured of the cordial support of the party throughout the county. The office sought the man in this instance, and we are confident that the wisdom of the choice will be demonstrated in November. Mr. Lehlbach's record in the Legislature last Winter was an enviable one, and to it he owes the good opinion everywhere felt for his principles and character. He is an indoest gentleman, who will do his whole duty to his constituents, and will vote on the right side of all questions.

THE Independents who are so forward in airing their very superior morals seem to forget that Grover Cleveland stands no chance of an election unless he receives the electoral vote of the solid South, and yet they know that he cannot carry the solid South except by intimidation and fraudulent ballots. Does it never occur to these over-consciencious Pharisees that they are relying on fraud as the means of electing their candidate at the very time when they protest that they are too good to vote with the party which has enacted every law designed to preserve the purity and freedom of the ballot box. The Independents seem to us a little worse than the Democrats, because to all their other objectionable qualities they have the sin of hypocrisy added.

Principle in Politics.

The recent quietude in political matters recalls to mind the narrative of two inveterate story-tellers who were matched against one another by irreverent companions. Left by themselves in the twilight, they were found in the morning in the same positions, literally talked to death. It is possible for a subject to be nervously exhausted, when a period of rest becomes necessary. In the present National campaign everything is made to tell. History has been ransacked for its scandals, stories have been told, caricatures drawn. No field remains untouched. Yet the issues are both plain and important.

No true Republican regrets the past history of his party. He is not sorry that he cast his vote for Garfield in 1880, or for Hayes in 1876, or for Grant or Lincoln. That slavery is dead is no cause for mourning. He rejoices in a re-constructed South, in sound finances, in the adoption of Civil Service rules, in the existence of the policy of protection. The country has prospered under Republican management; something more might have been wished for; any thing less would have been a grave error.

The history of the Democratic party is one of mistakes, of perils escaped, of issues dead and buried. Squatter sovereignty, State rights, human slavery, fiat money, the spoils of office, does any one wish them back? Is there any honest Democrat who is not ashamed of that record? Yet the fight is with the energy of despair. The enemy is unconquered; the South is as solid as ever; the hope and zeal of the Confederacy is unchanged. They were noble enemies in war; in peace, do not despise them. The prosperity of the country is based upon twenty-five years of industries protected, with new growths and vast developments. Can we afford to leave them defenseless now? Can we even afford to commit them to the tender mercies of our enemies? When necessary the Republican party has not hesitated to reduce the revenue. Within two years more than seventy-five millions per annum has been cut off. They will not hesitate to use the pruning knife again when need demands. Be not so reckless as to let another lay the axe to the root of the tree.

As to men. We hear much of the failure of our system of government. Those who admire the British form demand a change coinciding more or less with its provisions. Sometimes we are told our government is too strong; again it is too weak. It is not possible that the real or fancied trouble lies in a different direction, and that if we choose abler men the evils would grow less, possibly disappear altogether? For no other business would we choose men who were unknown. No railway company would be sustained for a moment in choosing a president without experience. Yet the conduct of fifty millions of people is sought to be given to a man who was for nine months Mayor of a small city, and a year and a half Governor of a State, without experience in National affairs, with no record upon vital questions of governmental policy, with too little courage to express an opinion, and pushed by some of the most corrupt combinations of his native State.

Is it possible that the people will choose such a man against the record of one who has been tried in the hot furnace of legislative and executive experience, and come forth unscathed? We think not. Such a mistake would be ruinous to free institutions, disastrous to manufacturing interests, discouraging to the friends of liberty and of reform in the Civil Service, and a useless clog upon national growth. In matters of such vast concern personal prejudice should be subordinated to the public need. That man is lacking in common sense who defeats an able man, and then prates of the failure of free institutions.

The Irish Vote.

"Inquirer" asks: "Why should our Irish-born citizens, as a class, support Blaine?" We are sure we know of no good reason why, "as a class," they should support any candidate. In what is the "Irish-born citizen" different from the American? What separate interest has he? Are not the defence of the land, the enforcement of law and the promotion of prosperity as much his concern as of any? Or is he, to the Democratic mind, unable to think or act for himself? We recognize but two classes in this connection; Americans and foreigners. Any citizen, whether born in the country or out of it, who is proud of his allegiance and whose delight it is to love, honor and obey the most perfect government ever known to mankind is an American.

This is the Republican idea. They recognize neither white nor black, Irishman or German, Scandanavian or Turk. A resident is an American or he is not. We believe in "America for the Americans," but do not judge of a person's Americanism by the place of his birth. There are many citizens in Bloomfield who first saw the light of day in some foreign land who are prouder of this country and appreciate more highly the blessing of living in it than many who owe their citizenship to accident instead of design. One sees, therefore, but little discussion of the Irish vote in Republican papers. They have no inducements to offer which apply especially to persons of any particular extraction.

The Democratic press, on the contrary, is raving in the most distracted manner over the prospect of a very large body of Irishmen voting the Republican ticket. It is no wonder the Democratic leaders are dismayed by the possibility of such a thing. They have for many years considered the "Irish vote" as mostly their own peculiar property as ever the master so considered his slaves. No matter what the issue or who the candidate, the "Irish vote" was always counted in advance. This enabled them to defy public opinion in a manner wholly inconsistent with good government. The casting of their solid vote as that of one man, irrespective of actions, platforms or principles, has been one of the incomprehensible things of our politics. It has worked much evil in the past and is full of danger for the future, and if this campaign shall serve to break up such a menace to our safety, this result alone would repay all the expenditure of time, labor and money. If did we say? Let us recall it, for the edict has gone forth, the handwriting has appeared upon the wall. The days of the Democratic irrepressible control of Irishmen are numbered. Rave on, gentlemen; Republicans will make no bids for favor appealing to prejudices of race. Thousands of Irish-born citizens will testify that the title of Americans, for themselves and their children, is nearer their hearts than any the old world can offer, and thousands will vote for that ablest representative of stalwart Americanism, James G. Blaine.

Interest in one's ancestry is commendable. Pride in the fact that said ancestors came over in the Mayflower, or hailed from Holland, or France, or Ireland or some other country is very well, but any man who thinks in his heart or says in his speech that any other country has a prior claim upon his interest or affection is unworthy the name of American. The Republican party has no use for him.

Why should an Irish-American be a Democrat? Is it because he believes in warring upon the National banks, because he believes in flooding the country with eighty-eight cent dollars, because he believes that we should favor foreign manufacturers at the expense of our own, because he wishes to place American labor in direct and disastrous competition with the pauper labor of Europe, because he wishes to take the bread out of his mouth and the clothes off his back and present them to British manufacturers and laborers? These are the principles of the Democrats and what they lead to. Let the Irishman who holds such opinions vote the Democratic ticket by all means.

But if he believes that charity begins at home—in the protection of American industry at home and the protection of the American citizen abroad, the Republican party is where he will be at home and where we believe he will find his way.
